

The Interview

CHARLES: I've been reading your CV and I must admit it's pretty impressive. You seem to have all we need. However, we cannot give you the job just on this alone. We need to know more, see if you are genuine. As you can probably understand, we need to assess all candidates.

Timothy nods

CHARLES: Ok, so what isn't on here that you think I would be interested to hear?

TIMOTHY: Where do I begin?

Charles frowns and stares at Timothy.

CHARLES: Sorry, but I think you look kind of familiar. Have I seen you before?

Timothy shrugs.

TIMOTHY: Maybe, I couldn't say. I don't owe you money, do I?

Charles smiles without humour and looks down at the CV.

TIMOTHY: I once had a trial for Lincoln Town FC. I was the best footballer in our school and the talent scouts picked me for trials, but you know when your heart is just not in it? I was more into maths and business.

Also, I'm a collector of vinyl. It just sounds so much better than all these modern day digital, downloads, and you can feel and hold and read it, not just as a computer file. I admit I don't mind some country and western and experimental jazz.

CHARLES: Me neither. So tell me about yourself. Who are you?
